Aly Murphy received a Bachelor of Arts in Mass Communications from the University of South Carolina and holds Certifications in Professional Etiquette and Advanced Behavior Analysis from The Charleston School of Protocol and the Nonverbal Group in Manhattan. Her workshops are heavily based on social psychology and neuroscience helping bridge the gap between the rules of etiquette and the principles they are founded on. Seminars are tailored to help individuals and groups better strengthen their social, emotional and moral intelligence for both personal and professional success.

Six Pillars of Civility is a look into the history and social psychology behind how our biological signatures play evolutionary roles in the way we interact with those around us. Topics include empathy, attunement, social cognition, self-presentation, gratitude and compassion.
